boy fell to the ground, where a stone struck one of his eyes and destroyed the sight. The boy then knew that the donkey was really an 'afrīt which had assumed animal form, and presently he heard it saying, "Don't come here again. If you do I will injure you!"

Up to the present time the boy, who is now a grown man, has never dared to return to this church for fear of the 'afrīt. He told my informant this story himself, and swears to the truth of it.

The 'afārīt, as I have already explained, sometimes leave their subterranean home and come above ground. It is therefore considered dangerous to stamp on the ground, to strike it with a stick, or to throw anything violently on it. Such acts should be especially avoided at night, when the 'afārīt are believed to come up in large numbers. If a man, therefore, has to walk some distance at night he is glad if he can get a fisherman to accompany him, for he believes that then no 'afrīt will come near him. The 'afārīt are afraid of fishermen and of their nets, and when they see these men throwing their nets they run away in terror. One woman told me that the 'afārīt fear that they may get caught in the nets.

A few days after I had left a certain village in Upper Egypt a boy who was employed by the 'omdeh (headman of the village) was in the building containing the machinery installed by the 'omdeh for pumping up water for irrigating his fields. It was at night, and for some reason or other the boy happened to stamp on the ground with his feet. Soon after he lay down to sleep, but was aroused by an 'afrīt who tried to pluck out his eyes. The boy cried out, "Oh, leave me, and forgive me!" But the 'afrīt refused, saying that when he had stamped on the ground he had injured the head of one of his children. The boy cried out, and then, being a Copt, crossed himself, whereupon the 'afrīt disappeared.

That 'afārīt are capable of kindly actions is shown in the following belief. A boy who is still uncircumcised may be mysteriously carried away when sleeping beside his mother at night. He will be brought back to his sleeping-place on the same night, and on the following morning his mother will find that he has been circumcised, the operation having been much better done than if it had been performed by the village barber; moreover, the wound will be found to have already healed. In such a case it is believed that the boy has a good ḳarīn who has brought good 'afārīt to perform this painful operation painlessly.

Paradoxical as it may seem, there appears to be a relation between the increase in this "drug habit" and the development of perennial irrigation. It has in fact been proved that this invention, which has doubled Egypt's wealth, has also encouraged bilharzia and ankylostomiasis. These diseases weaken the fellah and reduce his power to work. He seeks relief in the stimulant readiest to hand. As the men, who spend their lives in mud and water, are more affected by these diseases than the women, they are also more addicted to this "black tea" (46).

The cultivation of tobacco, which was brought into Egypt at the beginning of the seventeenth century, was forbidden by a decree of 25th June, 1890. Imported in the raw state from Greece, Turkey and Japan, and processed in Egypt, it is too dear for most of the fellaheen. As with coffee, it is in much greater use in the towns (47).

As a rule the fellaheen eat three meals a day; at sunrise before leaving for work (futûr); about 10 o'clock, in the field (ghâda); and at home at dusk ('asha). The fellaheen always sit cross-legged on the ground, and eat with their fingers.

Those at work usually eat their lunch (ghâda) in the open air and in company, each taking his food from the plate or enamel pot his wife has brought him, while the water bottle passes from hand to hand.

The chief meal is supper, which consists of warm cooked food eaten with the family. Cooking is done with oil over a Primus stove, or in a household oven fed with strawed cow-dung (gilla).

The fellaheen do not go in for cattle-rearing, and as meat is expensive they cannot eat much of it. They have mutton or beef at most once a week, and at least on the two great festivals, or when an animal is killed by accident. This means an orgy, at which everyone puts away tremendous helpings of food. Every now and again some rich man, for a vow or a funeral, kills an ox or gamoossa and gives away its meat; then the poorest can have a feast for nothing.

Those who live on the banks of the Nile, a large canal, or a lake, use nets to catch small fish, which they cook in oil. But most of them are limited to vegetables. Onions (bassal), turnips (lift), green peppers (filfil) and cucumbers (khiyâr) are eaten raw. Vegetables which they cook are ladies' fingers (bâmia) and molokhiya (Jew's mallow) (48), both of
